

Doctoral students should be aware that while they are on 0-credit internships (CPSY9788, CPSY9789, CPSY9877, CPSY9878, CPSY9884, or CPSY9885) they are not eligible for financial assistance from the Federal government, which requires at least half-time student status. During doctoral internships only, students who require continued financial assistance or loan deferment may meet the half-time requirement by enrolling in at least one 3-credit course per semester. Doctoral students receiving Federal financial aid should plan their course schedules with this in mind, and they should consult with their advisors/mentors well in advance of applying for internship training. Further, students relying on financial assistance from other sources should carefully review the terms of their grants and loans, to ensure that they are able to meet the eligibility requirements during internship.
